

EDUCATIONAL ACHIEVEMENT IN COMPARATIVE PERSPECTIVE

Donald J. Treiman^a
University of California at Los Angeles

Harry B.G. Ganzeboom^b
Free University of Amsterdam

Last revised 13 November 2013

Word count: 16,197

*Revised version of a paper presented by Treiman as the keynote address to the Hong Kong Sociological Association (HKSA) 1 Dec. 2012, at a Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences (FASS) seminar at the National University of Singapore 6 Dec. 2012, at Zhongshan University, Guangzhou, China, 17 Dec. 2012, and at the Duke Population Seminar 8 Feb. 2013; and by Ganzeboom at [xx HARRY: PLEASE ADD YOUR PRESENTATIONS]. We thank James Lee and Hua Ye for helpful comments when the paper was presented to the HKSA; Kurtulus Gemici and Joon Mo Son when the paper was presented at NUS; and Joe Hutz, Seth Sanders, and Duncan Thomas when the paper was presented at Duke. We are grateful for support in the completion of this research from the Department of Sociology and the Interuniversity Center for Social Science Theory and Methodology ICS at Utrecht University; the xx [VU —HARRY, WHAT SHOULD WE SAY ABOUT VU?]; the Asia Research Institute of the National University of Singapore; and the California Center for Population Research of the University of California at Los Angeles, which receives core support (R24-HD041022) from the Eunice Kennedy Shriver National Institute of Child Health and Human Development (NICHD).

^a California Center for Population Research at UCLA
4284 Public Affairs Bldg, MC 723603
PO Box 957236 (regular mail)
337 Charles E. Young Dr, East (courier mail)
Los Angeles, CA 90095, U.S.A.
Phone: +1/310/889-9660
Email: treimandj@gmail.com

^b Department of Research Methods
Free University of Amsterdam
[xx HARRY: PLEASE ADD YOUR DETAILS.]